About the Role

Flint's internship is primarily a training ground, with interns learning the key skills required to go into a communications role. Interns gain basic understanding in media relations, client liaison, business development, digital and social media campaigns as well as a clear working knowledge of a busy comms agency.

As well as a number of daily and weekly tasks, interns will work closely alongside account executives and account managers to deliver against a number of campaign objectives for approximately three campaigns across the three months, as well as ad hoc admin and research to support the agency as a whole.

Flint endeavour to ensure the intern's personal interests are met wherever possible, and we encourage regular review meetings to ensure that all aspects of training are delivered.

Applications - Please send CVs to Lizzie Rowles: Lizzie.Rowles@flint-culture.com with a short cover letter explaining your interest in working at Flint and availability.
